

Impact of fuel hike in tourism industry

People are going out again after the Corona epidemic which is a very positive aspect for the tourism industry. The tourism businessmen are quite happy to see that. Although international flights have started in full swing, foreign tourists have not started like that yet, but many think that it will increase in the coming days. But rising petrol, flight fuel, and hotel prices are pushing up travel costs. In particular, the price of petrol is now around Rs 112 per liter, which means it has become more expensive for people to get out of the house. Fuel prices could rise further next month.

The tourism sector has been hit hard by the coronavirus epidemic and the rise in fuel prices. Not only taxi fare but also hotel fare has increased. The sharp rise in fuel prices is having an impact on ordinary people and budget tourists alike.
